THE ORIGINS OF PROFESSIONAL LACROSSE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

1882–1886 ...Forgotten beginnings

The first ‘organised’ lacrosse game played in British Columbia (between teams representing two different cities) occurred on Saturday, August 28, 1886; played at Beacon Hill Park between the Vancouver and Victoria clubs, the visiting mainlanders won by the score of 3-1 – or three “games” to one, in the old-style nomenclature used at the time.

However, while this particular match has gone into the history books as the first lacrosse game played in the province, the game’s roots in British Columbia actually go back by four years to 1882.

On Thursday, February 16 of that year, an athletic club was organised in Victoria that included lacrosse as one of its sports. This was then followed by a highly-publicised match played at Beacon Hill Park on Saturday, June 17, 1882 – although it was essentially a scrimmage game between two teams made up from the mostly-inexperienced players of the Victoria Athletic Club. There are also newspaper records of a match in Victoria involving an unidentified collegiate team played a few weeks later as well as a photograph in the provincial archives dated from almost exactly a year later in 1883, taken in Victoria, of an unidentified lacrosse team in that city.

1886–1890 ...The National Game finds its feet

In the years between the 1886 Beacon Hill match and the formation of the British Columbia Amateur Lacrosse Association (BCALA) in 1890, lacrosse clubs would make haphazard arrangements for challenge matches – usually to be held on such popular, public holiday events as Empire Day or Dominion Day.

As in 1886, there was only one match reported played in 1887 – played between Victoria and Vancouver on Dominion Day with Victoria winning by two goals / “games” to none.

Vancouver Lacrosse Club was formally organised in 1888. The first practices were held on the sawdust at the Hastings Mill yard but it soon became apparent that more suitable playing grounds were required. Through the efforts of Al Larwill and others, work began on clearing the Cambie Street grounds which became the first home for athletic clubs in the city.

New Westminster newspapers reported the formation of a lacrosse club in that city on May 12, 1888, but local fans would have to wait another year before the first ever lacrosse game played in the Royal City.

The 1888 season saw multiple challenges being issued back and forth between the Victoria and Vancouver clubs. In August, Kamloops played host to a match between the Victoria Lacrosse Club and Vancouver Lacrosse Club during the Canadian Pacific Railroad picnic held there. Won 3-2 by Victoria, the match took around three hours duration to complete. At one point, high winds and a dust storm interrupted play and it took fifty minutes to complete play for the final “game”.

The following spring saw Vancouver Lacrosse Club put forth the Alhambra Cup for competition – originally to be won by the team winning the most matches played in Vancouver, although as the playing season progressed, the Vancouver club would sometimes announce beforehand that, regardless of location, the upcoming game would count towards Alhambra Cup competition.

On June 8, 1889, the visiting Vancouver team dispatched an inexperienced New Westminster side with a 3-1 result in the debut of lacrosse for the Royal City. From such inauspicious beginnings that Saturday afternoon, no one in attendance could have known they had just witnessed the birth of what would become arguably one of the most legendary lacrosse clubs in all of competitive sports.

After some wrangling, Vancouver and New Westminster ended up making the trip in September to the Kamloops CPR picnic to play; in the meanwhile, Victoria stayed home uninvited and sulked, feeling snubbed by the two other teams.

Concerns over betting at the final Alhambra Cup match in October 1889, which ended in a 2-2 draw, and disagreements between Vancouver and New Westminster over rules and player eligibility to play for what they deemed the ‘championship’, led some people to look at the example of Eastern Canada – for example, usage of a set code of rules like those used by the Manitoba Lacrosse Association. This encouraged them to look towards forming their own provincial association. A week before Christmas of 1889, during a dinner hosted by the president of the Vancouver Lacrosse Club for his players, discussion about the formation of a provincial association was brought up. The move towards formal, organised lacrosse would start to take shape in the spring.

1890–1908 ... Marching towards Professionalism

The (original) British Columbia Amateur Lacrosse Association was formed at a meeting held in Vancouver at the Windsor Hotel between the Vancouver, Victoria, and New Westminster clubs on March 22, 1890. A schedule of six matches was drafted up and New Westminster swept their series to claim the first provincial championship (although some later historical records indicate Victoria as the champion of the inaugural season).

Vancouver would then win the next two titles (1891, 1892) followed by Victoria in 1893 (some records indicate New Westminster) – however over the following years, New Westminster would dominate the championship scene with titles in 1894, 1895, and 1897 through 1902 with Vancouver picking up the slack in the intervening years.

The 1892 season was a great example of early organised field lacrosse. In an incredibly close campaign, each of Vancouver's five victories for the title was won by 1-goal margins, yet they still managed to let in more goals than they scored for the entire season. In those days, each goal scored was actually called winning a "game" and play ended after one team had accumulated four "games" to win the match or time ran out.

Victoria would have to wait until 1919 before winning a second senior amateur title for the Capital City but their closest attempt came during the 1894 season when they tied New Westminster in the league standings. As a result of the draw, a playoff game to determine the championship was played on October 20, 1894 at Brockton Oval in Vancouver. New Westminster showed up at the field an hour and a half late and this later caused the game being called due to darkness and Victoria holding a 3-2 lead with eleven minutes remaining. The referee refused to give the victory to Victoria and the club later withdrew from the BCALA on November 2, 1894 in protest of the referee's indecision and the late arrival of their opponents.

Two campaigns around the turn of the century – in 1899 and 1900 – saw organised league play deteriorate from numerous cancellations of matches. For example, in August 1900, some scheduled league matches involving New Westminster were cancelled due to their subsequently organised tour of Eastern Canada in August 1900. There were also some matches against Victoria that New Westminster possibly refused to play – allegedly due to 'rough play' on Victoria's part in meetings earlier in the season.

The senior ranks expanded in 1901 with the return of the Nanaimo Lacrosse Club after a two-year hiatus. The Coal City crew were able to secure a couple of surprise victories at the expense of the Vancouver club but generally remained the league's whipping post for the duration of their senior tenure. By mid-point of the 1902 season, the club had withdrawn from the league and defaulted their five remaining matches. The Vancouver YMCA lacrosse club went back east in October 1901 to challenge for the Minto Cup, the senior championship of Canada which was inaugurated earlier that season.

The 1903 senior lacrosse season ended in dispute between New Westminster and Vancouver and the league championship was still vehemently undecided at the start of the 1904 campaign. The differences between the two clubs dragged on after the three-team schedule was released. New Westminster withdrew from the league on June 2, 1904 after refusal to play two replays to decide the 1903 champion. There was some talk of a second Vancouver team joining, but in the end Vancouver Lacrosse Club and Victoria continued on with an eight-game schedule, which Vancouver handily won after five victories.

In 1905, the BCALA league was reformed with four members: New Westminster, Vancouver, Victoria, and a newly-formed club from Seattle. The Emerald City club was later ejected from the league after they were unable to play their two final scheduled games - a move somewhat encouraged by Vancouver since it would improve their record against their league-leading rivals in the Royal City.

The following season saw Victoria withdraw from the senior league and Vancouver field a second club in the form of the Mount Pleasant Maple Leafs. Late in the season, in September 1906, lacrosse players and fans saw the donation of the Kilmarnock Cup as a trophy for the provincial senior championship. Through the efforts of Victoria Lacrosse Club, the $500 mug was donated on behalf of the scotch distillers John Walker & Sons and brought over from England. The Kilmarnock Cup would remain in competition until retired at the close of the 1960s.

New Westminster became the first Kilmarnock Cup champion in 1907, defeating Mount Pleasant Maple Leafs 5-4. Mount Pleasant had previously bested the Vancouver Lacrosse Club 11-4 in an intra-city playoff.

Victoria rejoined the senior league for 1908. The original schedule was then revised in August to accommodate New Westminster's challenge trip to Montréal that resulted in the successful capture of the Minto Cup for the West Coast.

On September 26, 1908 in the final New Westminster-Vancouver match of the season, escalating player tempers on the field saw a riot break out when a New Westminster fan pelted a Vancouver player with eggs - which resulted in George Paris, the Vancouver trainer, retaliating by pulling out his gun and firing a shot into the crowd. Thankfully, no one was killed, although the bullet went through the coat of one spectator. Both clubs felt they were victims in the ugly incident and Vancouver stated their refusal to "play any further games in New Westminster..."

1909–1915 ...The National Game reigns over the West Coast

The infamous gunshot incident of 1908, still talked about amongst fans as late as the 1950s, slipped off the attention of league executives by the start of the following season, buried under the growing contentious debate regarding professionalism in the sport.

During the 1908 season, New Westminster Salmonbellies, an amateur team, challenged and defeated the Montréal Shamrocks and Ottawa Capitals, both professional teams, for the Minto Cup – which was awarded to the professional champion of Canada. Now tainted for playing against professionals, New Westminster's players had their amateur status revoked. As a result, in 1909 the BCALA went professional and the organisation became a league known as the British Columbia Lacrosse Association – although some amateur players were allowed and did compete alongside the professional players that season.

The bulk of the senior amateurs then formed a new organisation called the Pacific Coast Amateur Lacrosse Association. Around the same time, the British Columbia Coast Lacrosse Association formed on May 9, 1909 to replace the former BCALA as the provincial governing body for amateur players.

The professional BCCLA consisted of New Westminster Salmonbellies and the Vancouver Lacrosse Club and would stay at two member teams throughout its entire tenure - although as we shall see, many a season would be abandoned due to squabbling between clubs and owners. On July 24, 1909, the Vancouver Lacrosse Club won their first away game in four years, drubbing the Royal City squad 6-1 in front of the largest crowd out so far that season.

North Vancouver Lacrosse Club applied to the BCCLA in 1911 for membership. Two test matches were arranged in the pre-season pitting the North Vancouver squad against the two pro clubs. After being soundly defeated by results of 12-3 and 13-3, their application was quickly rejected.

The 1911 campaign probably stands, even to this day, as the high-water mark of British Columbian lacrosse in terms of both quality on the field and popularity in the stands. Édouard 'Newsy' Lalonde, regarded as the greatest lacrosse player of the first half of the 20th century, was signed on for $3,500 ($72,000 in modern currency) – an incredible sum of cash in those days for a professional athlete. The series between the two local rivals was very close and intense; the regular season resulting in a draw in the standings and a two-game, total-goals playoff was required to determine that year's Minto cupholders. Vancouver secured their first ever shutout against the hated Salmonbellies during the second of a pair of exhibition matches held in honour of the royal coronation. Crowds were huge, the 12,045 that weathered out a drizzled Dominion Day afternoon at Recreation Park was believed to have been a record breaker. Crowds in the range of 8,000 – in excess of record numbers just ten years prior – were considered the norm of the day and the attendance record would be surpassed again when the Toronto Tecumsehs unsuccessfully challenged the Vancouver Lacrosse Club for the Minto Cup in October.

After three seasons of unprecedented popularity, the BCCLA season collapsed seven games into the 1913 campaign. The Salmonbellies again had issues with the Vancouver club and had refused to start their Dominion Day match, walking off the field in protest. After almost two weeks with no agreement in the dispute, Con Jones pulled the plug on his Vancouver Lacrosse Club team and withdrew from the league on July 17, 1913 – refunding $5,000 in ticket revenue to disappointed fans as the sport skidded into the doldrums.

With Vancouver club president Con Jones, the famous local sports promoter and owner of a chain of tobacconist's shops, now calling it quits and out of the picture, popular interest in the game began to wane. More than any other individual, Jones was responsible for the promotion and growth of enthusiastic public support of lacrosse in the heady days of the early 1910s with his vast sums of money thrown around for signing players. His ‘retirement’ now coincided with the gradual departure of lacrosse from the sporting public’s hearts and minds.

After a successful PCALA season, the Vancouver Athletic Club fielded a professional team in 1914 and replaced the departed Vancouver Lacrosse Club in the BCLA. However, they too failed to make it to the end of the season as the club disbanded on July 8, 1914 – which sadly saw the end of one of the more promising pro seasons on the pitch to have come along in a few years.

For an all-too-brief moment in time, a pro league called the Western Lacrosse Association was formed in 1915 as a replacement for the (temporarily folded) BCLA with teams in Vancouver and Victoria. After the initial announcement of this newly formed league, no further reference was ever made to it again. New Westminster soon returned to the pro fold along with Vancouver – and, so too did Con Jones. Victoria was then quietly dropped and as far as anyone was concerned, the BCLA was back in business as per usual.

The British Columbia Amateur Lacrosse Association was formed in May 1915, six years after the demise of the previous BCALA incarnation as yet another provincial lacrosse body. There were now a whole host of provincial bodies abound: the BCALA, the PCALA, and the BCCLA organisations in the amateur ranks and the BCLA for the professional players.

Con Jones himself would soon fall into financial difficulties. With the Vancouver club mired in debt to the amount of $2,300 just two months into the 1915 season, Jones showed his accounting books to the Vancouver players and stated he would not be paying them for the rest of the season. The three Easterners that he had imported in for the season packed up and left for home the following week.

Organised Lacrosse fell by the wayside in 1916 and suspended operations for the duration of the First World War as the war effort took centre-stage attention.

1918–1924 ...Post-war Revival and the End of an Era

The Mainland Lacrosse Association was formed in 1918 with New Westminster and Vancouver as a pro league replacement to the inactive BCLA.

However a year later at the BCLA Annual Meetings held on May 8 and 15, 1919, the Minto Cup Trustees and British Columbia Lacrosse Association refused to recognise the results of the Mainland Lacrosse Association series as being official. Vancouver had won the eight-game series but would not be awarded the Minto Cup. Vancouver claimed that they were in perfect order to organise a new league in lieu of the BCLA, which had suspended operations for the duration of World War One. New Westminster disagreed and claimed (somewhat well after the fact) that their club did not actually operate in 1918.

The British Columbia Lacrosse Association resumed play that season with the New Westminster Salmonbellies and Vancouver Terminals. In the meantime, out of disgust with the recent situation with New Westminster, Con Jones walked away from the pro game turned his attention to supporting the amateurs.

A year later, in 1920, the May 24 game saw the largest crowd turnout in New Westminster since the heady days of 1911. The Dominion Day match-up saw the novelty of four movie cameras in attendance along with numerous fans from Vancouver Island and from as far as Seattle and Tacoma. The large crowds continued throughout the season.

May 1921 saw the formation of a second professional club in Vancouver – the Vancouver Lacrosse Club, fronted by Con Jones – after a large majority of the players with the Vancouver Terminals bolted the team due to money issues. After the New Westminster Salmonbellies declared their refusal to play Jones’s new team and stated they would only compete against the Terminals for the Minto Cup, Jones responded by forming a Victoria club and starting up a second, professional league for his team to play in.

This new league was called the Pacific Coast Lacrosse Association (different from the amateur PCALA in existence at the same time) and consisted of the new Vancouver Lacrosse Club and Victoria Capitals. With two professional leagues in operation simultaneously, as many as 16 players were recruited from Ontario – the majority signing with the Vancouver Terminals in the BCLA as replacements for those players lost to the Vancouver Lacrosse Club team in the PCLA. Victoria Capitals also benefited from the influx of Easterners to buttress their roster. Amongst all this roster movement, only New Westminster seemed unaffected.

However, soon after the PCLA played its first game, it was obvious to all that Victoria was seriously outclassed and talks began to merge into a three-team league with two Vancouver clubs and the Salmonbellies. No merger agreement was able to be worked out – and after five games into the season, the PCLA disbanded on June 13, 1921. Four days later, the Vancouver Lacrosse Club applied to join the BCLA but their request was denied. As the rest of the BCLA season played out, some Vancouver players in the PCLA eventually made their way back to their original BCLA club from which they had departed.

The BCLA league became a fatality in September 1923 with two games remaining to be played; like many previous seasons lost during mid-season, it was due to a grievance over scheduling.

As with every other season before, 1924 started with a lot of promise. But in the end, it proved to be the final curtain call when professional lacrosse in British Columbia died an inglorious death on June 3, 1924. Sadly, just as Con Jones had a hand in building up the professional game in Vancouver, he would have a hand in its demise in that city, and ultimately in Canada – as its last bastion was on the Pacific Coast. Four games into the season, Jones suddenly and without warning threw in the towel.

Like a ‘bolt from the blue’, as one newspaper commented, Jones was forced to quit the game on his doctor’s orders. When local baseball legend Bob Brown then offered to step in and take Jones’s place leading the Vancouver club, the rescue attempt was quickly quashed when Jones flatly refused to allow his park to be used free of charge to help keep the national game alive.

As the Vancouver Province stated: “And that’s that. Con Jones is through.” – and so died the last remnants of the pro lacrosse game in Canada.

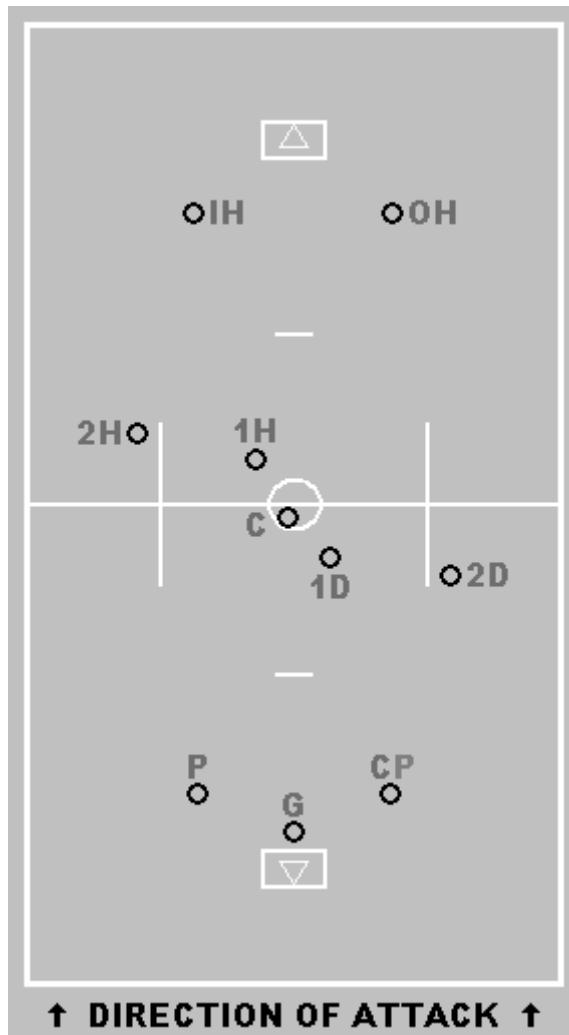

PLAYER POSITIONS NAMES

Until the 1940s, field lacrosse had specific names for identifying each and every position on the playing field. This nomenclature is still encountered in women's field lacrosse:

ATTACK	MIDFIELD	DEFENSE	GOAL
IH – Inside Home	2H – Second Home	1D – First Defense	G - Goaltender
OH – Outside Home	(3H – Third Home)	CP – Coverpoint
1H – First Home	C – Centre	P – Point
	(3D – Third Defense)
	2D – Second Defense

The two positions above listed in parentheses ('third home' and 'third defense') were eliminated in 1919 when 10-man rules replaced 12-man rules, although the 12-man rules had a brief revival two years later with the Pacific Coast Lacrosse Association. While it may appear the midfield would become more cluttered with 2 extra midfielders per team in the 12-man game, keep in mind that 12-man lacrosse was generally played on a larger playing field – such as a cricket oval or baseball diamond, rather than on a soccer-sized pitch as used in the modern game. Playing field sizes began to be reduced starting in 1915.

Lacrosse action (ca. 1912) at Recreation Park between the New Westminster Salmonbellies and Vancouver Lacrosse Club.

Goalkeeper Alban ‘Bun’ Clark comes up for the save against Vancouver. An Easterner who moved west from Cornwall, Clark played two seasons with Vancouver before signing with the Salmonbellies in 1912. He was one of the inaugural inductees into the Canadian Lacrosse Hall of Fame in 1965 (City of Vancouver Archives #371-580)

Vancouver Lacrosse Club lines up in this photograph from 1910 (City of Vancouver Archives #371-590)

Postcard of the Vancouver Lacrosse Club (from the personal collection of Steven Whitcombe)

Vancouver Lacrosse Club and Toronto Tecumsehs face off in Minto Cup action at Recreation Park in the autumn of 1911. The player wearing #7 is probably Vancouver centreman George Matheson while his Tecumseh counterpart on the draw is most likely Felker or Rountree. Photograph dates from either the September 30 or October 7, 1911 match. (City of Vancouver Archives #99-1128)

Probably the most famous lacrosse photograph from the time period covered in this book, Alban ‘Bun’ Clark defends the New Westminster goal against Vancouver sniper Angus ‘Bones’ Allen (#9) in this image which dates from ca. 1912-13.

Although photograph records claim this to be taken at Brockton Oval in 1912, the playing grounds looks suspiciously like Hastings Park – which wasn’t used for lacrosse until 1913.

Around 4,000 spectators showed up to witness Vancouver's debut at Hastings Park on May 31, 1913. The Hastings Park athletic grounds were located at what is now known as Callister Park (opposite Pacific Coliseum on Renfrew Street) and became Vancouver's new home grounds after relocating from Recreation Park. Con Jones would later build a grandstand on the site and it became the home of Vancouver's soccer teams until it was demolished in 1971. (City of Vancouver Archives CVA 371-576)

One-half of a panoramic view of Recreation Park in downtown Vancouver. This incredible photograph, which appears to be from one of the Minto Cup challenge matches played between Vancouver Lacrosse Club and Toronto Tecumsehs in the Autumn of 1911, not only clearly shows the capacity crowds drawn to lacrosse matches, but also the expansive size of playing fields used in those days.

Somewhere between 8,000 and 9,000 fans were reported to have attended this match, but at times there were crowds in the range of 11,000 to 15,000 souls crammed into the confines of Recreation Park. Two weeks prior to this match, a paid admission of 14,009 witnessed the playoff game held here between the Greenshirts and Salmonbellies (City of Vancouver Archives PAN 87)

Goal-mouth action (ca. 1911) at Recreation Park between New Westminster and Vancouver. 'Sandy' Gray is manning the goal for New Westminster.

Recreation Park was built in 1905 and located in downtown Vancouver bounded by Homer, Smithe, Hamilton, and Nelson Streets. Vancouver moved its home field to Hastings Park in the 1913 season. (City of Vancouver Archives #371-583)

More intense action at Recreation Park as a Vancouver defender battles for the airborne loose ball. In the background is the Standard Flour Mill located along Hamilton Street adjacent to the playing field. (City of Vancouver Archives #371-581)

June 8, 1918 match postponed until June 15, 1918 due to heavy rains

At the BCLA Annual Meetings on May 8 and 15, 1919, the Minto Cup Trustees and British Columbia Lacrosse Association refused to recognise the results of the Vancouver-New Westminster 1918 series as being official. Vancouver won the Mainland Lacrosse Association series but was not awarded the Minto Cup. Vancouver claimed that they were in perfect order to organize a new league in lieu of the BCLA, which had suspended operations for the duration of World War One. New Westminster disagreed and claimed (after the fact) that their club did not actually operate in 1918.

"New Westminster Lacrosse Team 1910 World's Champions Defenders of the Minto Cup"

This photograph probably dates from late July 1910 after New Westminster had defeated the Montréal Lacrosse Club in two games 10-4 and 13-5 to retain their hold over the Minto Cup.

The player lying on the ground to the left is Gordon 'Grumpy' Spring, a goal-scoring machine for the Salmonbellies and probably the best offensive player to wear the redshirt sweater during the professional field lacrosse era.

After his retirement as a player in 1921, Spring then became a referee in the pro league – and was later coach and manager of the Salmonbellies during the box lacrosse era. (City of Vancouver Archives Sp P91)

New Westminster Salmonbellies defeated Vancouver Terminals 3-2 in overtime during the season opener on May 15, 1920. Vancouver later protested the result on account of a disallowed goal scored (acknowledged by New Westminster). The protest was awarded and the result was changed to a 3-3 draw.

September 11, 1920 match postponed to September 15, then again to September 18 before it was cancelled. The clubs then agreed to a playoff series to be held in New Westminster at the end of the month

Édouard ‘Newsy’ Lalonde played the inside home position with the Vancouver Lacrosse Club during the heyday of pro lacrosse in the 1910's and 1920's. One of the leading goal scorers to play for Vancouver, in 1911 he was signed for $3,500 ($72,000 in modern currency) – an incredible sum of cash in those days for a professional athlete.

He was also a hall-of-famer hockey player with the Montréal Canadiens.

In 1950, Lalonde was named the ‘Lacrosse Player of the Half Century’ in a nationwide Canadian Press poll. (City of Vancouver Archives #371-578)

Goal judge – or goal umpire as they were sometimes called – signalling a goal scored by Vancouver at Recreation Park in action between the New Westminster Salmonbellies and Vancouver Lacrosse Club.

This photograph dates from September 5, 1910 and features the famous boxer Tommy Burns (the player in the white shorts), Canada's only heavyweight world champion. Burns was also a lacrosse player back in his earlier years and Con Jones paid him to appear as a promotion stunt for the otherwise meaningless match. Well past his prime a player and kept scoreless, Burns nevertheless helped draw 5,000 curious fans to the park that afternoon.

The curly-haired chap on the left playing for New Westminster is Tom Gifford, the eldest of three lacrosse-playing brothers - all future Canadian hall-of-famers - with New Westminster and a stalwart force on the Salmonbellies defense. He then took over the management reigns of the Salmonbellies when he retired from the game after the 1912 season. (City of Vancouver Archives #371-584)

Alex 'Dad' Turnbull (1863-1956) – home (midfield) & outside home (attack)

Born in Ontario, Turnbull played his earliest senior games with an assortment of Toronto and area clubs – such as Toronto, Paris, Brockville, Perth, the Toronto Elms, West Torontos, and then the famous Toronto Tecumsehs. In the fall of 1897, Turnbull moved to British Columbia - first to Rossland and then onwards to New Westminster where he played with the New Westminster Salmonbellies from 1897 until 1909 with a brief comeback in 1918.

A true legend on the field, 'Dad' was regarded, by the standards of his day, to be quite healthy for his age and a model athlete for his diet and regimen. Notable for the era, he never drank and very rarely smoked and he was praised in newspapers such as the Ottawa Citizen for his temperance and "clean living".

He was a member of the Canadian Olympic team that won a gold medal for lacrosse at the 1908 London games.

In the twilight of his career when the professional game came along, he had to stop playing in 1909 after suffering two broken ribs during a game, but made a comeback in 1918 at age 46. In later years, he was employed as the warden at the provincial jail in New Westminster. In 1965, he was posthumously inducted as a charter member to the Canadian Lacrosse Hall of Fame. Two years later he was inducted into the British Columbia Sports Hall of Fame. (NWCA IHP1725)

☞ A WORD ABOUT OLD STATISTICS ☝

With the invention of the internet, modern sports statistics are available almost instantaneously and are impeccably accurate; however, sport statistics from almost one-hundred years ago are a different story. Apart from, perhaps, baseball, sports organizations in the early 1900s did not issue official statistical releases; we now rely on old newspapers as our primary source of data for historical statistics.

Accuracy and detail were not hallmarks of early 20th century newspaper statistic reporting. Most statistics were compiled by reporters or newspaper staff while at matches. Therefore, it isn't uncommon to find different, competing newspapers publishing contradictory data about the same lacrosse match where rosters, score times, scorers and game results have all been erroneously reported.

The information presented in this work does not rely on statistical totals which were occasionally printed by newspapers at the season's end – and almost always inaccurate to some degree. All data presented in this work was compiled by referencing the closest contemporary source available, namely, game summaries and boxscores. The data presented is as accurate as possible, given the state of the resources.

Most discrepancies are found in reporting penalty minutes. Players were often expelled for the duration of the match, but their penalty minutes were not noted in the boxscore. Instead, reporters indicated that the player was expelled for the “rest of game,” but failed to clarify how much time remained. In this work, penalty minutes were, in some instances, estimated from information found in newspaper write-ups. The author would like you to bear in mind that penalty minute totals are not 100% accurate.

Early newspapers, especially those printed prior to the First World War, usually omitted a player's given name. This seems to be the result of social practices of the era, as individuals were often referred to by their initials instead of their first name. Additionally, nicknames were extremely common and used regularly. For example, the goalkeeper, Clark (sometimes spelled Clarke), who played with both the New Westminster and Vancouver clubs, was universally called ‘Bun’; his given name, Alvan or Alban, only appeared twice in the newspapers – it's believed Alban is the correct name. Another ‘Bun’ of note was Cornwall transplant, Aaron Watson. Although Watson's nickname was actually ‘Bunt,’ a local newspaper mistakenly referred to him as ‘Bun’ and the name caught on.

Additionally, the spelling of players' names was inconsistent from game to game, from season to season and, sometimes, within even the same article. The best example of this occurrence is Charlie Donohoe/Donohue.

Another cause for confusion occurred when two (or more) brothers played on the same team — which, surprisingly, was quite frequent — or when teammates shared the same surname. Amongst the most difficult pair of siblings to identify accurately were the Patchell brothers, Willis and William (Bill). This became even trickier when only one of the brothers participated in a match. In these cases the player is listed only as “W. Patchell.” Similar difficulties occurred with the Painter brothers (Harry and Joe) – where Harry ‘Fat’ Painter was often listed as Painter, H. Painter or F. Painter (confusing because he had a brother named Fred and may have been mistook for him) – and the Feeney brothers, James (better known as ‘Pat’) and George. We only know ‘Pat’ Feeney's given name, James, from a 1911 tobacco card and a couple of references made early on in his career. Even then he is identified, not as James, but as ‘Jas.’, a then common variation of James. With the Turnbull's of New Westminster, Len and Bill were brothers – but teammate Alex, better known as ‘Dad’, was not related to either.

Ernie, Robert ('Bob'), and Bert Murray posed similar problems; at the time of writing the first edition in 2011, it was unknown whether the three Murray's who appear here were related or simply players who all shared the same surname. After publication of the first edition, it was discovered from an article in the Victoria Daily Colonist that the Murray's were yet another family of lacrosse-playing brothers – five of them!
